

Client : Russia-Singapore Business Forum
Publication : Channels TV
Heading : Russians Eye Singapore IPOs
Date : September 28, 2010
URL : http://www.channelstv.com/global/news\_details.php?nid=22932&cat=Business

CHANNELS ...STATION OF THE DECADE
NIGERIA'S TELEVISION OF THE YEAR (2000, 2001, 2003, 2004 & 2008)

HOME VIDEOS LOCAL NEWS WORLD NEWS POLITICS BUSINESS HEALTH SPORTS

LATEST NEWS Bomb Blast: Police Arrests Suspects, Declares Two Others Wanted...

FirstBank The flexibility of a current account now available with a savings account
GET A FirstSavings Plus account

You are here » Home » Business

Russians Eye Singapore IPOs

September 28, 2010 0:00 am

Facebook Twitter LinkedIn Email Print Share

As many as six Russian companies are considering listing in Singapore, as Asia's bourses compete for a slice of the estimated $150 billion Russian companies need for debt-servicing and expansion over the next five years.

Dismissing suggestions that Hong Kong would be the preferred choice for Russian capital raising efforts, executive director of the Russia-Singapore business forum, Michael Tay, said Singapore was in discussions with at least four players.

E.D.Russia-Singapore business forum, Michael Tay speaking:

"There are many Russian companies, including a shipping company, that's looking at a potential listing in Singapore because their business is aligned with our strength, and they are looking at the Southeast Asian market."

As many as six Russian companies are considering listing in Singapore, as Asia's bourses compete for a slice of the estimated $150 billion Russian companies need for debt-servicing and expansion over the next five years.

Dismissing suggestions that Hong Kong would be the preferred choice for Russian capital raising efforts, executive director of the Russia-Singapore business forum, Michael Tay, said Singapore was in discussions with at least four players.

E.D.Russia-Singapore business forum, Michael Tay speaking:

"There are many Russian companies, including a shipping company, that's looking at a potential listing in Singapore because their business is aligned with our strength, and they are looking at the Southeast Asian market."

Tay says the shipping firm could list on Singapore's SGX in a year.

Singapore's Business Times quoted investment firm Quadro Capital Management as saying they were advising two of at least six interested Russian companies.

Andrei Sharonov, head of investment banking at Troika Dialog, says Russia's vast array of companies offer more than just resource plays.

Head of Investment banking, Andrei Sharonov speaking:

"We have some other very interesting growing sectors, like telecom, like retail, food and retail. It's smaller but their quality and quantity of growth looks higher than in traditional resource sectors."

He also says Russian firms are in turn attracted to higher valuations from Asian investors compared to investors in London and New York.

Hong Kong is seen as a natural choice for China-oriented Russian resource firms given its proximity to the mainland, but Tay says Singapore does offer advantages.

E.D.Russia-Singapore business forum, Michael Tay speaking:

"We are mainly English-speaking, you know, our manuals, our listing documents are all in English, which is much easier. We are also very globally connected to the region, we are more connected to ASEAN, and perhaps even South Korea and Taiwan, than Hong Kong is."

Russian capital raising efforts in Asia first caught the attention of investors earlier this year, when aluminum producer Rusal raised $2.25 billion in a Hong Kong listing. As many five other Russian resource companies, are reportedly considering similar listings there.